

Weekly Macro & Markets View

Highlights and View

- China's economic downturn is gathering steam

Targeted policy loosening is setting the stage for a turnaround later this year.

- US households consider it to be the worst time to buy a house since 2008

The University of Michigan's consumer confidence survey reveals that households have become increasingly reluctant to buy major household items, vehicles or houses.

- Bank Indonesia and the Central Bank of Argentina raised policy rates against expectations

Both banks responded quickly to the Turkish currency crisis last week in order to defend their currencies. We believe only a few EM countries are vulnerable from an external financing perspective.

China slowdown intensifies, but light at the end of the tunnel

Source: Bloomberg

Economic statistics for July confirmed that China's economic slowdown continues. Data came in even weaker than consensus had expected, with industrial production up a tepid 6% YoY, and nominal retail sales up only 8.8% YoY, a 15-year low, driven by weaker electronics sales. The major drag came from fixed asset investments, particularly infrastructure investment growth, which hit a record low. On a smoothed basis, infrastructure investment even contracted, as the chart shows. However, it has to be noted that manufacturing and real estate investment growth have started to pick up again and that home sales remain brisk, up 24.8% YoY, while new floor space under construction surged 36% YoY. Weak infrastructure spending is a result of over-tightening following the deleveraging process that was initiated by the government as a medium to long-term policy target. We believe that while risk-reduction policies will remain in place, there is some leeway around them, and policy fine tuning has already started, with further stimulus measures on the monetary, fiscal and regulatory front in the offing. Indeed, fiscal spending is likely to increase substantially in the next few months, with urban rail transportation projects at the forefront. While the current drag on the economy may persist through this quarter, we believe the economy will turn around in Q4 and into next year, although accelerating trade disputes with the US remain a risk.

Credit: The nascent bounce appears to be stalling

The recent bounce in credit markets appears to be stalling. This bounce, which occurred after the almost relentless spread widening of last few months, is under threat despite US equities being particularly resilient and hovering around all-time highs. European credit markets were weak amid a lifeless primary market, with the culprit being weakness in corporates rather than financials. A bridge collapse in Italy caused Atlantia spreads to spike while commodity credits were weak, as copper declined by around 4% following investor concerns around Chinese growth, which also caused Chinese equities to underperform significantly. As expected, financial credit stabilised somewhat after the Turkey related jitters of the previous week, although late on Friday both Moody's and S&P downgraded Turkish debt. Flows were also almost universally negative for various credit sectors, with the usual exception of US investment grade, where inflows were also weaker than before. All in all, credit's lag to equities looks set to continue.

---

US: Small business optimism reaches a multi-decade high

Small business optimism has reached a new cycle high, climbing to 107.9 in July. Most of the subcomponents reflect a healthy state of the broader economy. However, driven by an ever tighter labour market, difficulty filling open positions has risen to the highest on record and is a significant challenge for businesses, creating a headwind for a further expansion in a number of sectors. Meanwhile, the University of Michigan's consumer confidence index ticked down to the lowest in almost a year, with households more reluctant to buy big ticket items. The more cautious mood was not reflected in retail sales, which rebounded in July after a slowdown in June. Housing data was mixed with housing starts failing to significantly improve in July after the steep fall the month before. Building permits did increase but August's NAHB home builders' index ticked down to the lowest since September last year, indicating that the housing market is unlikely to re-accelerate much in the near term.

---

Eurozone: Italian bond spreads move back close to recent highs

Eurozone Q2 GDP growth was revised up to 0.4% QoQ from an initial estimate of 0.3% QoQ, with German growth in particular revised higher. The ZEW investor expectations survey also increased in August for the first time since January. This suggests underlying economic momentum in the region is still strong. However, internal and external risks remain this year. The biggest external risk to the Eurozone is the ongoing trade dispute between the US and China. The news that the two parties are resuming negotiations is encouraging. The biggest internal risk remains the upcoming Italian budget for 2019. Spreads between Italian and German government bonds have widened in recent weeks and are back close to late May highs. We think it is unlikely that the Italian government will enact all the spending proposals contained in the original 5 Star Movement and Lega Party coalition deal in the 2019 budget, but there is likely to be some fiscal slippage. Spreads are likely to stay volatile and in a wide trading range for the next few months until investors have greater clarity on the Italian government's plans.

---

UK: Unemployment rate falls to a 43-year low

The unemployment rate fell to 4% in June, the lowest level since 1975, although the latest drop was mainly driven by a falling participation rate. The number of employed persons actually fell in June. Wage growth continued to decelerate, with growth in core wages (ex bonuses) ticking down to 2.7% YoY from 2.8%. Annual headline CPI inflation accelerated to 2.5% in July despite a flat MoM reading. Core CPI remained at 1.9% YoY, down from 2.7% at the beginning of the year and the lowest level so far this year. Input prices continued to move higher, reaching 10.9% YoY after slowing down to 3.9% earlier this year, indicating that inflation is likely to remain above the BoE's target for the time being. Currency weakness is a key driver of higher input costs as sterling has fallen back to the lowest level in more than a year. While distorted by the football World Cup and unusually hot weather, the rebound in retail sales by 0.9% in July is a positive signal that the UK economy is holding up reasonably well entering the third quarter despite rising Brexit uncertainty.

---

Indonesia: Coordinated policy measures are taken as EM volatility increases

Bank Indonesia (BI) raised its policy rate to 5.50%, taking the cumulative hikes to 125bps this year. BI reiterated its focus on maintaining "macroeconomic and financial system stability" and defending the currency. The rupiah weakened further against the US dollar last week, mirroring the weakness in other EM currencies. The softness in the rupiah also reflects a deteriorating current account deficit. Indeed, vigorous domestic demand has boosted imports. To rein in imports, the government has announced that it would delay second-priority infrastructure projects, impose restrictions on 500 imported products, and promote the use of biodiesel. Policymakers' actions are coordinated, which is positive. That said, we are wary of the potential unintended impact of some measures on the ease of doing business, and possibly, inflation. In its 2019 draft budget, the government also shifted its focus away from investment to social spending. We view this shift as sensible: the main transportation projects will be completed, but the rest of the pipeline will be put on hold to adjust to tighter financing conditions.

What to Watch

- We expect the G3 flash PMIs to show that momentum is holding up in the major economies, as they have been less impacted than emerging markets by recent market pressure.
- In Asia, CPI data for July will be released in Japan, Hong Kong, Singapore and Malaysia. Industrial production in Singapore and exports in Thailand round out a relatively calm week in terms of Asian economic data.
- In the Eurozone, various business confidence surveys will be released during the week that should confirm that economic activity remains strong.

Disclaimer and cautionary statement

This publication has been prepared by Zurich Insurance Group Ltd and the opinions expressed therein are those of Zurich Insurance Group Ltd as of the date of writing and are subject to change without notice.

This publication has been produced solely for informational purposes. The analysis contained and opinions expressed herein are based on numerous assumptions concerning anticipated results that are inherently subject to significant economic, competitive, and other uncertainties and contingencies. Different assumptions could result in materially different conclusions. All information contained in this publication have been compiled and obtained from sources believed to be reliable and credible but no representation or warranty, express or implied, is made by Zurich Insurance Group Ltd or any of its subsidiaries (the 'Group') as to their accuracy or completeness.

Opinions expressed and analyses contained herein might differ from or be contrary to those expressed by other Group functions or contained in other documents of the Group, as a result of using different assumptions and/or criteria.

The Group may buy, sell, cover or otherwise change the nature, form or amount of its investments, including any investments identified in this publication, without further notice for any reason.

This publication is not intended to be legal, underwriting, financial investment or any other type of professional advice. No content in this publication constitutes a recommendation that any particular investment, security, transaction or investment strategy is suitable for any specific person. The content in this publication is not designed to meet any one's personal situation. The Group hereby disclaims any duty to update any information in this publication.

Persons requiring advice should consult an independent adviser (the Group does not provide investment or personalized advice).

The Group disclaims any and all liability whatsoever resulting from the use of or reliance upon publication. Certain statements in this publication are forward-looking statements, including, but not limited to, statements that are predictions of or indicate future events, trends, plans, developments or objectives. Undue reliance should not be placed on such statements because, by their nature, they are subject to known and unknown risks and uncertainties and can be affected by other factors that could cause actual results, developments and plans and objectives to differ materially from those expressed or implied in the forward-looking statements.

The subject matter of this publication is also not tied to any specific insurance product nor will it ensure coverage under any insurance policy.

This publication may not be reproduced either in whole, or in part, without prior written permission of Zurich Insurance Group Ltd, Mythenquai 2, 8002 Zurich, Switzerland. Zurich Insurance Group Ltd expressly prohibits the distribution of this publication to third parties for any reason. Neither Zurich Insurance Group Ltd nor any of its subsidiaries accept liability for any loss arising from the use or distribution of publication. This publication is for distribution only under such circumstances as may be permitted by applicable law and regulations. This publication does not constitute an offer or an invitation for the sale or purchase of securities in any jurisdiction.